

Sundhedspsykologisk selskab inviterer hermed til kursus med psykolog Søren Balling:

Samtaler, hvor børn deltager

1-dags kursus i København

Tirsdag d. 21. maj 2013

Oftentimes we in our adult clinical practice find ourselves with children and their parents, whom we would like to address. One can in this situation choose to work with the intermediary relation, but it can at times be more purposeful to invite the child or children to one or more sessions. One can in this situation feel professionally unsure about how to go about this task, and it is this, which we would like to work with on this course day.

The aim of the day is to provide participants with knowledge and methodical considerations about how they can go about the task, so that the invited adults and children can benefit from the session.

The course will take the starting point in relations as objects for our attention and intervention. In the course of the day we will also work with, which goals we can have for such sessions, and which preparation this makes possible. Finally, there will be a special focus on the ethical challenges it creates to invite children to sessions.

The theoretical approach for the day will be systemic, social constructionist and narrative approaches, together with, that developmental psychological angles are included.

The day will run so that from the start relevant literature and theory, in the afternoon will be used to focus on methodical considerations.

To make the course as relevant as possible for participants, it is striven for that their own experiences are included. If you as a course participant wish to bring e.g. a video recording of a session, where a child/children participate, this is very welcome. In such cases please contact the teacher.

The teacher for the course is psychologist Søren Balling. He is a daily employee at Kræftens Bekæmpelses Kræftrådgivning in Lyngby, where he has contact with people affected by cancer in various ways. He is a recognized specialist in child- and family psychology, and has through many years worked with family therapy in municipalities around Copenhagen. Finally, he is a member of the board in DSS.

Relevant literature for inspiration and possible preparation will be suggested upon registration.
